The American artist known for her explicit Artforum ad on her extraordinary life at the centre of the 1970s NYC art scene

The sculptor and feminist icon Lynda Benglis is making ham sandwiches. She toasts the rye bread, slathers on a thick layer of butter and varnishes the filling with a fig relish. Coffee is poured into white china cups; napkins are fetched. Then we sit down at a marble-topped table in the middle of her vast loft in SoHo, New York City, to discuss the time when she stood before a camera, naked with a massive dildoprotruding from her crotch
